STANDS HIGH IN HER PARIS STUDIES

Miss Muriel Paul, a 1923 graduate of the University of Saskatchewan, has just brought honor to herself and her home college by winning the diploma of the School of Preparation for the Professorship in Foreign Countries, at the Sorbonne, the famous university of Paris, France.

Word of her success has just been received by Professor John A. MacDonald, head of the department of French in the university here.

Mr. MacDonald said that the diploma which had been won by Miss Paul was difficult of attainment by foreign students. They have to conform to a program of studies primarily intended for native French students preparing themselves for professorships in foreign lands.

Miss Paul's achievement is the more remarkable in that she went to Paris direct from graduation at Saskatoon, without having taken an any post-graduate work. She stands eighth in the list of successful students of the Sorbonne this year, and first among the foreign students. She has been encouraged by her teachers to prepare for the doctorate, but whether she may do without further obligation of attendance at the university.

TAUGHT SCHOOL IN WEST

Miss Paul is a native of Napanee, Ontario, and daughter of Mr. and Mrs. A. E. Paul. She came to Western Canada some six years ago, taught school in Saskatchewan and worked her way through the provincial university. In 1923 she was graduated with high honors in French and English, and in the same year obtained one of the Peacock scholarships given by the provincial government.

Miss Paul is the second Saskatchewan graduate to win distinction at the University of Paris, a diploma of high university studies having been obtained by Miss Geraldine Dallon, now Mrs. G. Jack Mackenzie, in 1923. —Saskatoon Daily Star.

DESERONTO.

The large shipments of matches daily leaving the storerooms of the Dominion Match Co. may necessitate the reopening of the factory at a date earlier than anticipated on the close-down during the hot weather. During the past two weeks several carloads have been shipped from the warehouse, besides large daily shipments by freight. From seven to eight hundred cases are required for one carload and the heavy shipments are rapidly depleting the large stock in storage.

Mr. Thomas G. McWain is conditioning his pleasure cruiser, "Quinte Lady," for cruising Bay of Quinte waters with a party of Toronto capitalists, who will visit his beautiful summer home at Forester's Island for a period.

Mr. A. Marchand and party, of Montreal, are tourists to Deseronto and territory.

The bathing location of the "Mermaids' Club" is the scene of large daily gatherings of many enjoying a dip in the cooling waters.

The Trenton baseball players visited Deseronto on Tuesday evening for a game with the local aggregation. Transportation delayed the players in motor troubles, and the game was called at the end of the seventh inning on account of darkness. The play throughout was a fine exhibition of baseball and the spectators were on-tiptoe excitement during the seven inning play, which resulted in the score of 4-3 in favor of Deseronto.

Contractors in charge of highway construction through Deseronto visited the town for inspection of work to be done and machinery required. Work on the highway will start on arrival of the road-making machinery and will in a large way relieve the unemployment situation in Deseronto for the next three months.

Mr. Joseph Archer is seriously ill at his home, East Main street. His many friends hope for his early return to health.

The steamer Brockville carried a large crowd of picnickers to Twelve O'Clock Point on Thursday, the occasion being the annual picnic of the Sunday Schools of the parish of Tyendinaga. While the weather of the day was not all that could be desired, those in attendance report a delightful sail and a very enjoyable day.

The steamer Brockville will leave the Big Dock, Deseronto, at 8.30 a.m., on Wednesday, July 30th, for the Deseronto Methodist Sunday School picnic to Belleville, and will leave Bridge Belleville at 7 o'clock

Mr. and Mrs. J. P. Ashworth, of Ottawa, are renewing acquaintances in town.

Mr. Parker Marsh and daughter, Gladys, of Hamilton, are vacation visitors to relatives and friends in Deseronto.

The Napanee team visited Deseronto on Wednesday evening to play the fifth game in the league series. Deseronto teams in the pool tournament, and were successful in defeating the Deseronto team by eleven points. Whitton's pool and billiard parlor was crowded with spectators, who witnessed a fine exhibition of play. The tournament which had a few more games to run, has practically been abandoned, as the poor showing made by Belleville in this last game with Napanee was too big a handicap for the Deseronto players to overcome. The cup, therefore, was awarded to the Napanee players.

The Rev. C. Adams, Chaplain of the British Navy League, paid a recent visit to Deseronto soliciting subscriptions towards the funds of the League.

OBJECTION TO SOFT COAL AT POSTOFFICE

The Napanee Post Office and Customs building has been taking in a supply of soft coal for heating purposes during the coming winter, much to the disgust of residents in the vicinity. For the past two winters soft coal was used and the smoke stack belched forth almost continuously, dense black clouds of soot-laden smoke, defacing the ground, the houses, and also besmirching the clothing of pedestrians. The prospects for the ensuing winter is that the conditions will be as bad as in the past.

A petition to the Government will be sent from the citizens of Napanee asking that the building be heated with anthracite coal, or if soft coal be used, that the proper smoke-consuming device be put in operation so that this nuisance may cease.

Citizens desirous of signing the petition will find copies of the same at The Napanee Express Office, The Napanee Beaver Office, The Bank of Montreal, Dominion Bank, Royal Bank, and Standard Bank.

NAPANEE DISTRICT BOYS' CAMP

FIELD DAY RESULTS.

All the results of the Field Day Competition have been made according to Standard Graded Scoring tables, by means of which younger and smaller boys are each given a handicap according to age and weight.

There were three divisions of Field Sports, Throwing, Running and Jumping, with two events each. The badges below in each division were earned on the average of the marks obtained in the two events of the division. In throwing there were (1) Throwing Baseball for Distance, and (2) the Shot Put ; in Running (1) the Sprint, and (2) the Potato Race ; in Jumping, (1) the Running Broad Jump, and (2) the Running High Jump.

Five Groups competed, two Tuxis Groups, the "Crows," and the "Baker's Dirty Dozen" ; and three Trail Rangers Groups, the "Gas House Gang," the "Loyal Sons," and the "O. K.'s".

Even though a competitor made only a few in some things every mark counted for his group and if he missed an event it counted against his group.

GROUP RESULTS

"Loyal Sons"—11 members, 3487 marks ; or 317 marks per man.

"Dirty Dozen"—15 members, 4748 marks ; or 316¼ marks per man.

"O.K."—9 members, 2834 marks ; or 315 marks per man.

"Gas House"—14 members, 4180 marks ; or 298½ marks per man.

"Crows"—15 members, 4379 marks ; or 292 marks per man.

Camp Average—69 members, 19628 marks ; or 307 marks per man.

The Pennant for the Loyal Sons will be mailed to H. McNeely, Newburgh, the only Loyal Son to gain over 70 per cent. Both the Loyal Sons and the Dirty Dozen had an almost perfect attendance to the events and each Group had a single very poor entry to a single event would have earned more credits per man than the difference between them.

The Camp average of 307 marks or 61 per cent per man is rather low, and should be increased next year.

HIGHEST INDIVIDUAL STANDING (70 p.c. and Over).

H. Loyal (Crows) obtained 559 marks, or 93 per cent. (Pennant).

J. Ebert, (Dirty Dozen) obtained 524 marks, or 87 per cent.

D. Wood, (O.K.) obtained 495 marks, or 82½ per cent.

H. Russell, (O.K.) obtained 463 marks, or 77 per cent.

CELEBRATES 89TH BIRTHDAY

A very pleasant gathering met at the home of Mr. and Mrs. R. H. Wagar, Enterprise, on Tuesday, July 22nd, to celebrate the 89th birthday of Mrs. Wagar's father, Mr. Chester Brown, of Napanee.

There were present besides his wife, four daughters, three sons-in-law, one son and one daughter-in-law, six grand-daughters, two grand-sons, one great-granddaughter and three great-grandsons, two nieces with husbands, one great niece and nephew. The dining-room was beautifully decorated and a very sumptuous dinner prepared by Mr. Brown's daughters.

After dinner all gathered in the parlor to sing praises to the great God of Heaven who has been so kind to permit so many loved ones to be together once more on this his footstool, after which some left to attend the wedding of another nephew, Mr. Boyd Varnest, to Miss Edna Mc-Gee, in Trinity Church, Napanee. Those who remained played games on the lawn till late afternoon.

A BIRTHDAY GREETING TO CHESTER W. BROWN.

You're a spry young man, just turned-ninety,
Never knew anything quite so fine.
It's grand to be eighty-nine years young ;
And that is why we have merrily sung :
"Mr. Brown is eighty-nine today,
No wonder we're taking time to play."

Your children and grand-children gathered here,
A few great grand-children, all so dear.
Many happy returns we are wishing you,
And praying God that your skies be blue ;
And that joy from heaven may fill your heart,
Till you reach the land where we shall not part.
God bless our loved one, be ever near,
To guard and guide and comfort and cheer.

DRILLING FOR GOLD AND DISCOVER IRIDIUM

Edmonton, July 25.—One of the most valuable minerals in the world today, iridium, has been discovered in the upper waters of the Peace River, by the Canyon Gold Mining Company.

A representative of an Edmonton syndicate arrived from the north after having filed claims for ten miles along the river, and he is of the opinion that a real old-time stampede will result from the discovery.

The precious metal was discovered when drillers of the Canyon Gold Mining Company, drilling for gold, discovered gumlike flakes of the metal on the bed rock.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

BY REV. C. G. TRUMBULL.
(Editor of The Sunday School Times).

THE FIRST DISCIPLES OF JESUS

Sunday, Aug. 3.—John 1 : 35-51.

Golden Text—Jesus saith unto him, Follow Me.—John 1 : 43.

The impact of Jesus Christ upon men ; that is what we study in this lesson. It means, of course, the impact of God upon men, for the man Christ Jesus was and is God. We see how six different typical men "reacted" to the presence and the pressure of Christ. For Christ brings pressure upon men.

"When we study carefully the purpose of John (the Gospel of John)" wrote Dr. Griffith Thomas in "How to Study the four Gospels," "we find the two ideas of Fact (20 : 30) and Faith (v. 31)." When we face certain facts with open mind and heart, faith is bound to follow. The six men in this lesson squarely faced the facts, and in all of them faith resulted.

Whenever any man finds people becoming his own disciples, let him make them Christ's disciples. And this is what John the Baptist did—pointing away from himself to his Lord, in the words, "Behold the Lamb of God" (v. 36). This pointing away from self must be genuine, not pious affectation. John succeeded, for his own disciples turned away from him and "they followed Jesus." (v. 37..

What did he expression, "the Lamb of God," mean to a Jew in that day ? Were they thinking, do you suppose, of the fifty-third chapter of Isaiah ? Were they thinking of the Old Testament sacrifices, and the Passover Lamb, so all gathered up in this Man of Nazareth ?

Many years ago the former Editor of The Sunday School Times, H. Clay Trumbull, wrote an editorial entitled "The Duty of Striving to Render Oneself Useless." John the Baptist succeeded in this ; we all ought to. And when he had turned his disciples away from himself, they followed Jesus so interestedly that His question-invitation came next, "What seek ye ?" What came the thrilling word from the Lord, "Come and see." (v. 39).

Christ gives the same invitation to every one who inquires of Him. All who answer it openheartedly will do as these two disciples did : they "came, they saw, they stayed. They could not leave Christ. They are with Him to this day. They can be with Him through all eternity. So will you and I be, if we do as they did.

We hear much about the scientific mind, ready to face any facts and accept the conclusions. Andrew had a scientific mind. He faced the Fact of facts, and he accepted the conclusion. Faith, after this Fact, was inescapable, and he told his brother Simon, "We have found Messiah, which is, being interpreted, the Christ." (v. 41). Andrew needed no more than our legitimate imagination to think of what these two had seen in Jesus's home. What did they see in Jesus himself ? We may well bring together other Scriptures, pointing to the Christ to fill them in here as our answer.

Andrew not only told Simon about Jesus, but he brought him to Jesus. The true soul-winner stays by his man until he has brought him through. Merely telling the truth about Christ is not always soul-winning. We must get people into the presence of Christ.

And then, in Christ's presence, our Lord Himself has a chance to speak to them, as He did directly to Simon. He promised Simon a changed name, which meant also a changed character, a changed eternity. Are not most people likely to feel, in the presence of Christ, "He could change my name ; He could make me a new creation ?"

Christ passes from invitation to command when, finding Philip, He says to him, "Follow Me." (v. 43). Would you have considered it an honor to be commanded by Kitchener or Lord Roberts or Nelson or Wellington ? Think, then of being commanded by Christ ! And that honor we have.

Philip joyously succumbs to the facts, seeks out a friend, and his faith makes the astounding statement that "Jesus of Nazareth, the Son of Joseph," they have found Him of whom Moses and the prophets wrote ! The one for whom Israel and the world had been waiting for a millennium and a half was this young Carpenter of an obscure village.

And now, in this machine-gun fire of facts and faith there comes a sudden stop, as the first doubt obtrudes. Nathaniel will not believe (v. 46).

What is the best argument to use with a doubter ? Abuse ? No. Condemnation ? No. Simply give him a chance to face the facts. "Philip saith unto him, Come and see."

And Jesus' first word to Nathaniel is one of commendation ! Our Lord commended the doubter, but not his doubts. Nathaniel was a wholly sincere and liberal pointed this out (v. 47). Then Christ went on and disclosed Nathaniel to himself (v. 48), and Nathaniel broke down in complete confession of faith. Two of the most beautiful incidents in our Lord's lifetime are the witness of belief from two doubters, one at the very beginning, the other at the very end of His public ministry. Nathaniel's cry, "Thou art the Son of God ; thou art the King of Israel." Thomas' cry, "My Lord and my God."

Here are seven striking facts in this lesson :

Jesus Points to Jesus (v. 36).
Jesus Invites (vs. 38, 39).
Jesus Convinces (vs. 41, 45, 49).
Jesus Promises (v. 42).
Jesus Understands Fully (vs. 47, 48).
Jesus Prophesies (v. 50).
Jesus Saves (v. 51).

TAKING CARE OF THE HONEY CROP

(Experimental Farms Note).

Honey is a perishable article, no matter whether it is left in the comb or extracted. With care it can be kept in good condition for long periods, especially in the extracted form. Nectar, as stored by the bees, contains a high percentage of water, which must be evaporated before the honey can be extracted. When the cells are filled up the right amount of evaporation has taken place, the honey is sealed over and is then considered to be "ripe". It is not advisable to extract honey until at least three-fourths of the cells are capped, especially in regions where the honey is inclined to be rather thin. Comb honey should be left on the hives until all cells containing honey are sealed, but should not left on longer than it is necessary, as sections are darkened and lose their travel stained.

The honey should be extracted as soon as possible after the supers are removed from the hives and if done while still warm, more will be taken from the combs. After the honey is extracted it must be strained to remove all foreign matter. Straining may also be done through fine cheesecloth or by letting the honey stand in tanks for two or three days, when all foreign matter will have risen to the surface. If the honey is well ripened, it should be placed in the final containers at once before it starts to granulate, but if it is too thin it should be left in the tanks a short time for further ripening. Honey should be stored in a dray place, as it readily absorbs moisture from a damp atmosphere. Honey ripening in tanks should stnd in a warm, dry room. Ripened honey in containers ready for market will keep better in a cold, dry place. Section honey should be stored in a well ventilated room where the temperature is high and constant or moisture will condense on the cappings and be absorbed.

Gets Even With Mother-in-Law.

The Italian dictator who has done so much to restore law and discipline in his country, altered a law the other day, which hitherto permitted the parents of senators to travel free on the Italian state railways.

Until now senators, their family and the parents on both sides were allowed this advantage, but from now on the ladies will be an exception.

It is whispered that the cause of the change may be attributed to Mussolini's old hatred of his mother-in-law. When as a young man he was engaged to his present wife he had to put up with much resistance on the part of his mother-in-law, who at last chased him out of the house and forbade him to have anything to do with her daughter. She did not consider Mussolini good enough to be her son-in-law. But one day the world's people who loved each other disappeared from home and got married.

Mussolini cannot forget his mother-in-law's behavior, and because of it all Italian senators will have now to pay their railway tickets. At least so the story goes!

A Curious Gold Ring.

A curious gold ring, said once to have been part of the jewels of a British king, and which tallies in design with one which disappeared from the English court in 1649 and since has been listed on the records as of unknown whereabouts, was found by a New Haven man in the sand near Thimble Islands. Thimble Islands are noted as a rendezvous of Capt. Kidd, and it is believed the ring was a part of the treasure loot of the pirate who, according to legends, buried his spoils in that vicinity. History states that the nearest resemblance to the ring was worn by Lady Catherine Grey, and it is said to have signified her marriage with the Earl of Hertford. Queen Elizabeth, displeased with the union, sent Hertford to the Tower of London in confinement and subjected Lady Catherine to many hardships.

ON PARLIAMENT HILL

BY A MEMBER OF THE PARLIAMENTARY PRESS GALLERY.

The close of the Session finds Parliament in the position of being able to look back upon a term of unusual length and more than ordinary interest. It finds the Government more firmly in the saddle than at any time since its election to office ; the possessor of a record that will stand a great deal in the way of comparison and in a position to consolidate its gains and to prepare for still further efforts toward broad-minded, effectual and practical administration.

The Government began the session by announcing its plans in a Speech from the Throne that was out of the ordinary ; a document that did not depend for its interests upon time-worn platitudes, but that actually created a storm of protest from the Conservatives on the ground that it was too definite ; that it actually made specific promises and forecasts of legislation !

AN EPOCH-MAKING BUDGET

It did—and those forecasts have been implemented. Outstanding in achievements was the action of the Government in setting out determinedly upon a new fiscal policy, a policy toward low tariffs upon the implements of production and the necessaries of life. The Budget of the Session just closed was epoch-making. It called a halt to the rising tide of High Protection ; it applied form and body to the pre-election pledges of the Prime Minister ; it recognized the cardinal requirements of basic industries and it put the welfare of the millions of consumers above the selfish suffering of the privileged few. It threw a final and unmistakable challenge in the face of the forces of fiscal reaction and it opened the way for another and later "golden era," such as that which followed the tariff of '96.

No less important than the reduction in tariff duties was the horizontal and specific lowering of the Sales Tax, affecting scores of commodities ; the granting of free materials to the manufacturers of widely diversified implements of production ; an appreciable swelling of the free list, and very generous reductions in the Income Tax by way of increased exemptions for children under fifteen years of age.

Summed up in a broad way, the Budget announced in the address in the net debt of some $35,000,000 and a reduction of the ensuing burden of taxation of between $26,000,000 and $28,000,000—not a bad showing in the face of opposition cries of "hard times!"

THE CANADIAN NATIONAL AND THE SENATE.

In another way, the Government has proved its ability to assist those whose labor means the production of food and other raw or semi-raw products, by sanctioning the building of Canadian National Railway Branch Lines (chiefly in Western Canada) to a total expenditure of $28,000,000 [illegible] so far as the Senate is concerned, this expenditure was considered, once the Senate put its blighting hand upon the Legislation. But that hand is not the hand of the living administration. Two years in succession, that Government has passed the Bill providing for these feeders ; two years in succession the Senate has refused to allow their construction. But a crisis has arisen in regard to poaching, and not for a third time will the purblind denizens of an autocratic and antiquated annex be permitted to thwart the efforts of a Government which has attempted thus often to assist statutory form the definitely-expressed will of the free electorate.

SAFEGUARDING THE BANK DEPOSITORS.

The Government has not disregarded the lessons of the Home Bank. Apart altogether from the distinct issue of indemnification of depositors, it has translated that lesson into law.

Bank inspection has become a reality. "For better or for worse" a second full and final trial will be —It has made obligatory for the Canadian Banking System a scheme of inspection that should make impossible a recurrence of the Home Bank affair. There may prove to be imperfections in the new Act, but these can be found out next year ; meantime, the average Canadian whose thrift has enabled him to set aside in this Bank or that a few dollars for a rainy day will sleep more easily in the realization that the Government has decided to throw its weight with the patrons of banks rather than with the banks themselves.

LOWER FREIGHT RATES IN WEST.

Western Canada in particular benefits from one piece of Legislation—the restoration in full force of the Crow's Nest Agreement in freight rates. Under this, Westbound freight rates are lowered on as high as 20 commodities, and the advantage will lie equally with the Eastern shipper and the Prairie producer.

British Columbia feels that it may suffer in consequence, but the common good of all ever is put outwith the claim of the few. The Pacific Province finds its course toward definite fame and prosperity at a great crossroads. Ing Province given new impetus by the Government's recognition of the just demands of Vancouver Harbour, and the voting of further sums for the construction of new terminal facilities of various kinds, including grain elevators and efficient dockages.

TORONTO AND MONTREAL BENEFIT.

Toronto—long ignored by all Governments and particularly cold-shouldered by Conservative Administrations upon whose election to power it lavished all its votes—has gained from the Liberal Government of the day what it was never able to secure from its friends. The long-awaited and greviously-required Waterfront Viaduct has been made possible by the bi-partisan and far-seeing statesmanship of Mackenzie King.

Likewise has Montreal gained something it has sought these many years—the necessary Federal guarantee for the gigantic undertaking of a new traffic bridge across the St. Lawrence River. Thus are great cities remembered by a Government which has had the courage to put first the requirements of the great rural areas of a country which, for decades to come, must draw its strength and its riches from the soil.

A FAIR RE-DISTRIBUTION BILL

Re-distribution has been put through, and without a fight ; without charges of gerrymander and malfeasance ; The establishment of the Commons is raised from 235 to 245. The new seats go to Western Canada, the Provinces of Nova Scotia alone suffering a reduction in representation, despite the efforts of the Maritime members.

CHURCH UNION RATIFIED.

One problem the present Government faced, which it well might have been pardoned for avoiding, had that been possible. Reference is made, of course, to Church Union. Resolutely, the Private Bills Committee, under the outstanding guidance of Hal. B. McGiverin, met the situation and courageously it carried out its task. The Commons approved the Bill as presented by the Unionists, with minor amendments ; yet did it in such a manner as to win the genuine admiration and esteem even of those who had been its bitterest opponents. Compromises were induced ; both sides of the controversy gave up a little ; Parliament, in both Houses, adopted an attitude, thoroughly praiseworthy —and both sides are more than pleased with the outcome than it had seemed possible either could be when the Bill first knocked on the Commons's door.

NEW TRADE AGREEMENTS.

Looking beyond mere geographical horizons, the Government has added to every effort for the stimulation of extra-territorial trade and commerce. The Free and Unrestricted Treaty and the last Session were added to by similar pacts with Belgium and Finland ; pacts which extensions of these small but friendly nations the "most favored nation" principle. The Commons strengthened the hand of the Government and approved both the trading agreements, but the Senate in its superior wisdom, placed its veto upon the one which sought to encourage trade between Canada and the thrifty and industrious community of Finland.

ceding in London, insisting upon absolute equality of status as a partner in the Empire was endorsed practically unanimously by the House. As a result of Premier King's consistent and courageous stand on every instance where Downing Street tried to put Canada back into the old colonial status it is safe to say that history will accord him an enduring place among the makers of the constitution of the British Commonwealth.

ALL PROMISES IMPLEMENTED

The Government winds up the session with every promise made in the speech from the Throne implemented in legislation—with the one exception of the legislation providing for the adoption of the alternative vote ; and it was needless to press this in the dying hours of the session with stubborn Opposition from the Conservatives and final killing in the Senate, certain in event. The Bill will be made a first order next session ; and anyway no general election is contemplated before Parliament has another chance to enact the electoral reform so urgently demanded by the Progressives. The Prime Minister sat at rest doubts as to an election this year by declaring, in answer to Mr. Good that "the Government sees no necessity for an election this year."

NOBODY WANTS AN ELECTION

It is safe to say that the people of Canada see no necessity for it either. Certainly the Conservatives do not want it, for they realize that for this session at least they have lost rather than gained political ground, while the Liberals and Progressives are quite content with the progress made, and after the closing of present industrial depression pass away believe the heightened prestige and popularity of the Government will enable it to command later on the renewed confidence of the electors after the fulfillment of pledges and the testing out by time of the fiscal policies enacted.

ORIGINAL MOUNTIES WHOOP 'ER UP

Top—The old stage coach added a little color to the MacLeod celebration. Left—Those two old squaws remembered their first sight of a Mounted Policeman. Right—Rexie, who lost a race and did not survive.

The photographs reproduced above were taken, not a century ago as may be supposed, but early in July of this year when the town of MacLeod, Alberta, celebrated its Jubilee with a stampede and other goings-on reminiscent of the days of horse-thieves and Indian raids, and the advent of the Royal North-West Mounted Police.

There is a very pretty little story told in connection with this celebration. Rexie, a beautiful race-horse owned by "Old Three Sons," a Black-foot Indian, although fourteen years old, was entered again to race. This horse was said to have never lost a race. Sleek and beautiful, she was the pride of the prairies, and as proud as she was beautiful. But her age was beginning to tell. Though she strained every muscle in her body, coaxed by "Old Three Sons" crouching on her back, having lost the lead she could not regain it, and for the first time in her racing life Rexie finished second. No more will she set the prairie turf flying under her feet. Having trotted back to the judges' stands, Rexie sank to the ground dead. She died, it is said, of a broken heart.

This was the only event which in any way tended to mar the Jubilee. A rodeo was held, some seventeen thousand visitors from all over the continent helping the cowboys and cow-girls, and the Black-feet, Blood and Peigan Indians, to "whoop 'er up." Three thousand automobiles parked in Main street and out on the open prairie, and for three nights the old-time dance halls remained open for the benefit of those who could not find accommodation in the town or in one of the sleeping cars which crowded the Canadian Pacific yards.

The Indians, who once terrorized the country-side, were encamped in vari-colored teepees in the centre of the town. Here they took part in the old-time war dances under the eyes of the remaining members of the original squadron of the "Royal North-West." Cowboys and Indians had to have their say, but after all, the event was mainly in honor of those who remembered the Fall of 1874 and were numbered with the "Mounties" who established Fort Macleod. Grizzled old men, most of them, but young at heart, they entered into the spirit of the days and were as active as any in "Whoopin' 'er up."

Here and There

Up to the end of May, 1924, over 779,000,000 fry of different kinds were distributed throughout Canada from the fish hatcheries operated by the Department of Marine and Fisheries, a recent despatch from Ottawa declares.

A surplus of $366,011 is shown in the annual report of the Vancouver Board of Harbor Commissioners for the year 1923. Receipts totalled $725,886. There was an increase of $4,813,797 in the value of all exports and imports. The actual value of all freights was $40,593,924.

Among the passengers sailing for England on the Canadian Pacific steamship "Marloch" July 3rd from Montreal was a large party of teachers, who will join the tour of the Overseas Educational League, which this year is covering Great Britain, France and Belgium.

A set of 12 beautiful colored pictorial menu cards illustrative of the history and romance of Canada has just been placed in service by the Canadian Pacific Railway on its crack transcontinental expresses, the Trans-Canada Limited and the Mountaineer. Especially interesting are four reproducing authentic photographs of prairie Indians, accompanied by descriptive text.

The newsprint production in May this year both for Canadian and United States mills was greater than the previous months. Canadian mills made a new high record, the total for the month being 117,-833 tons, compared with a previous high figure of 115,573 tons and their production for the first five months of the year exceeded that of 1923 by 56,087 tons or approximately 11 per cent.

"Canada is the country for the Scotsman and I am going to bring every opportunity that Canada can offer, especially in farming, before my compatriots," declared the Rev. William Dunlop, M.A., F.S.A., of Buckhaven, Fifeshire, when in Montreal recently, on a tour of the Dominion investigating its agricultural possibilities. "But you are sadly in need of more people and we can supply them."

Through the generosity of the British Museum, the Ecole Arts School of the City of Quebec has been enriched by the donation of a precious collection of books on arts, which contain over 3,000 reproductions of masterpieces. Among historic schools represented are the English of the 14th Century, the Italian of the 15th Century, the German of the 15th Century and the French and Danish of the 18th and 17th Centuries respectively.

For the 12 months ending May 31, Canada had a favorable trade balance of nearly $200,000,000. Exports during that period totalled $1,069,715,880 and imports $873,-367,752 in value. This represents an increase in value over the exports of 1923 of $130,000,000 and of $32,000,000 over the imports of that year. The chief increases in exports were noted in agriculture, wood and paper.

The first resi[illegible]nce of the Jesuit Fathers at Sill[illegible], which was built in 1630, has been presented to the Province of Quebec by the sons of the late Rene Lemieux, minister in the Laurier cabinet of 1896. Something new in the way of "stunts" was staged at Montreal on July 4th by the publicity association of that city, as a send-off to Canadian and United States delegates going to the annual convention of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World, which opened on July 12 at London, England. The 250 men of the party rolled a huge ball made of wood and canvas through the principal streets from a local hotel to the docks occupied by the Canadian Pacific steamship "Montcalm," upon which they subsequently sailed.

More Gaelic Teachers.

The Gaelic question is being much debated in Ireland, according to a report just issued by the National Catholic Welfare Council. Advocates of economy object to the publication in both English and Gaelic of all Dail reports and official announcements. They argue that the Gaelic versions are doubly useless because they are faulty in grammar and idiom. They wish English to be the sole official language until the people can read and speak Gaelic. Upholders of Gaelic blame the opposition as pedantry. They say the aim should be to make the native tongue the language of the home and of business in the shortest time possible. The first step is to get Gaelic written and spoken intelligently and leave correctness to come afterward. Father Dinen, the celebrated Irish scholar, says that every year there is an increased number of trained teachers who have a good knowledge of Gaelic, but lack the method of imparting a knowledge of the language with maximum results. A new Gaelic college has been established in Dublin.

Brotherhood of Natives.

Natives are organizing a branch of "The Brotherhood of Natives," the main object of which, is to love and help one's fellowman irrespective of tribe, color or creed, in Johannesburg, South Africa. At the first meeting of the "lodge" the principal speaker explained that the brotherhood was a world movement for the social uplift and general well-being of the Bantu races. He paid tribute to the many Europeans who had provided employment for the native population, and advised his fellows to live in peace with their neighbors, to whom they owed much in the way of gratitude and obedience.

Coke Industry

All down through the ages necessity has been the mother of invention and the factor which led to greater economy and conservation of resources, writer Ernest G. Mackay.

In the iron and steel industry, necessity drove the manufacturer from wood, charcoal and anthracite to the use of coke for smelting purposes. The change from one fuel to another was brought about by the shortage of wood within reasonable range of smelting operations, the ever-increasing demand for larger tonnages of iron and steel at a lower cost, and the desire to save wood for other purposes. In the use of coke as a domestic fuel; history is repeating itself. From the use of wood, bituminous and anthracite coals, we are turning slowly but surely to coke as a fuel for all purposes where anthracite is not formerly used, and for very logical reasons.

In the year 1923 approximately 152,980 tons of anthracite coal were brought into the Maritime Provinces at a cost to the consumer of $2,600,-660, as follows:

Nova Scotia	57,820 tons
New Brunswick	91,000 tons
P. E. Island	4,160 tons
	152,980 tons

Assuming that the average consumer paid $17 a ton for this coal delivered in his cellar, then $2,294,700 went out of the country; and that the dealer paid $15 a ton for the coal delivered on his dock or in his sheds, it cost $305,960, to handle and deliver. A total cost to consumer of $2,600,660.

With these figures before us it is evident that we should make every effort to avoid this large outlay. That this foreign fuel bill is avoidable has been demonstrated by experiments carried on during the past five years with domestic coke.

We have the coal, we have the coal washers, we have the coke ovens, we have the by-products recovering equipment, and we have the men with brains and experience in the industry. Is it economically sound business, then, and are we fair with ourselves when we go abroad for this class of fuel. Let us consider for a moment what economic advantages would accrue to the Maritime Provinces if coke were used instead of foreign anthracite.

Now if 152,980 tons of metallurgical coke had been used, made from our own coals, mined and coked by our own workmen, shipped over our own railroads or in our own ships, the advantage would be approximately as follows:

Assuming that the average consumer paid $17 a ton for his anthracite and that the average consumer, big and small; paid $14 a ton for coke, then:

1st.—Consumer saves $458,940, or $3 a ton.

2nd.—A new market for 405,960 tons of coal.

3rd.—Giving continuous employment yearly for 600 miners.

4th.—Continuous employment for 200 men at coke plant.

5th.—Additional freight for Canadian railroads, 152,980 tons.

6th.—Gas: 3,059,600,000 cubic feet, $764,900.00.

7th.—Ammonium sulphate, 7,649,-000 lbs., $267,715.00.

8th.—Tar, 3,059,600 gals., $61,-192.00.

9th.—Motor fuel, 917,880 gals., $229,470.00.

10th.—Royalty on 305,960 tons of coal, $58,245.00.

11th.—Cost of anthracite, $2,294,-700.00.

Which means a saving to Canada of $3,656,222.00.

In the year 1870 the first coke ovens were built in Nova Scotia to produce coke for metallurgical purposes, and since that time every effort has been made to improve the structure and quality of the coke which is so essential to the successful operation of the iron and steel industry. In 1890 a modern coal-washing plant and 54 Bernard retort coke ovens were erected. This was the first unit of its kind put into operation in Canada and probably the earliest plant at which the complete operation of washing to purify coal and coking it for metallurgical use was successfully practiced in America.

With the object of improving if possible the quality of the coke, systematic tests have been made from time to time of Nova Scotia coals in every type of washer and coke oven in Europe and the United States; with the result that to-day is to be found in Sydney, Nova Scotia, the "last word" in modern coal washers, coke ovens, and by-product equipment.

The quality of the product of this plant is beyond question and can be honestly recommended as a good, clean, efficient, high carbon fuel, which can be used to advantage in any type of oven, stove, furnace, or boiler where anthracite is now being used.

In the process of manufacturing metallurgical coke the coal is selected from the mines producing the best metallurgical coal, crushed fine so that particles of stone and slate may be separated from it by gravity in a British Baum washer. After washing, the coal is conveyed to storage towers at the ovens where it drips, preparatory to being charged into the ovens for coking. The coking operation is simply an expulsion of the volatile combustible matter in the coal in a long narrow air-tight chamber which is kept at a high temperature by the circulation of the gases around the oven walls.

The volatile matter with its available and exceedingly complete mixtures passes through the elaborate system of solar radiation with photographs of the sun he has found that there is an increase in heat radiated by the sun on the same days that sun spots form, grow or are brought into view on the visible disk of the sun by rotation.

KHALIFATE ABOLISHED

MUSTAPHA KEMAL IS NATIONAL HERO.

It Is Doubtful If Other Moslems Will Accept Decision of Turkish President—Kemal Claims There Is No Mention of Khalifate In Koran.

In abolishing the Khalifate, Mustapha Kemal has taken a step which one writer compares with that of Mussolini if he should announce that the pope was deposed and the papacy at an end. It is conceivable that so far as Italy is concerned Mussolini might induce the people to endorse his action; it is much more than conceivable that the Turks will approve what Kemal has done. He is their national hero, the greatest Turk, perhaps, who has appeared in a thousand years. It is doubtful if the other Moslems who are not Turks, and there are more than 200,000,000 Moslems in the world—will accept Kemal's decision. To a certain extent he is the hero of all Moslems, but he is no such hero in India, for instance, as is Gandhi. The non-Turkish Moslems may insist upon setting up a Khalifate of their own. They may regard the Turks as apostates.

Great Britain and France would be very glad indeed, if they appointed a successor to Abdul Medjid. It would greatly simplify their administration of Moslem lands. The trouble is that these powers differ as to the proper Khalif. Britain is in favor of King Hussein, of Hedjaz, who is supposed to be a descendant of the Prophet, while France supports the claims of Mouley Youssef, Sultan of Morocco.

In November, 1922, Kemal separated the Sultanate and the Khalifate which had been joined in the same ruler since the death of Mohammed. He sent Sultan Mohammed VI into exile, and announced that his son Abdul Medjid would be the Khalif until further notice. There was no protest so far as we are aware from the Turks, and it is obvious that a holy office that could be awarded as Kemal saw fit was lacking in the reverence that such offices should command. Now Kemal says that the office is abolished, not because the Khalif was not friendly to the Nationalists, but because the institution had become outworn. The Turkish Minister of Justice, who is an authority on Moslem religious law comes forward with the assertion that there is not to be found in the Koran any authority for a Khalifate, and that the office was an extraneous political growth.

If there is no mention of the Khalifate in the Koran, undoubtedly it ought to be abolished, for the Koran is interpreted by its believers more literally than any other sacred book. It professes to contain a complete guide to conduct as set forth in the revelations made to Mohammed. The Mohammedans have no other sacred books, no other source of authority, and yet because the religion absorbed so rapidly many backward races it is said to be the most flexible of all religions. As an authority has written:—

"No religion of the modern world was so profoundly influenced and so intimately involved during the late war as Mohammedanism. Prior to the war it was struggling against the disintegrating influences of the twentieth century. In Africa alone was appreciable progress being made. The power of an aggressive monotheism, based upon strong democratic principles, which has never known a color discrimination, has proved irresistable in Africa.

"But with the war, Mohammedanism, already vexed by modernistic influences in Egypt and Turkey, underwent its most rigorous trials. On one hand was the fanatical superstitious Moslem of Arabia, whose Turkish superior had long lost communal respect. On the other were the Indian Moslems of the British, as well as those ruled by France and Russia, sensible of the danger of distinguishing the corrupt Turkish state."

This is largely due to Kemal Pasha that the religion of which he has become the arbiter, if not dictator, did not crumble. He has won military and diplomatic victories that aroused the pride of Moslems everywhere. His Angora assembly became to Moslems the most important legislative body in the world. Its decisions were received with almost as much respect as though they had been the promulgations of the Prophet himself. In these circumstances, it is rather curious that Kemal has abolished the Khalifate which he absolutely controlled. It is especially hard to understand if he aimed, as has been suggested, to become the acknowledged leader of Moslems everywhere, for it would have been much simpler to rule them as Khalif than as president of Turkey. If, however, he is a true Nationalist, and has no other thought than the advancement of Turkish interests and the release of the Turks entirely from various degrading superstitions and fettering traditions, his abolishment of the Khalifate needs no further explanation.

Mohammed's successors have combined the office of Sultan and Khalif for the simple reason that Mohammed combined them. He was the state. When he died he was succeeded by Abu Bekr, as Khalif, which means "successor," and though he was the absolute ruler, he was elected in a democratic manner. The succeeding Khalifs for some hundreds of years were kept busy extending the frontiers of their religion by massacring those who disagreed with them or refused to accept the Koran. They waged a long succession of successful holy wars. A limit was set to their advance at the Battle of Tours. Had Charles Martel not proved the victor in that conflict, according to Gibbon, "perhaps the interpretation of the Koran would now be taught in the schools of Oxford and her pulpits might demonstrate to a circumcized people the sanctity and truth of their revelations of Mohammed."

Wins £250 for Knitting Jumper.

To win £250 and a fine silver cup for knitting a jumper is an achievement worth talking about, even in these days of novel competitions. The feat stands to the credit of Miss C. Hearl, of Bristol, Eng., who, in carrying off the honors in the recent International Knitting Contest, becomes champion knitter of Great Britain and Ireland.

The contest was specially exciting in its closing stages. For over a week the finalists were engaged in knitting an intricately designed jumper.

A Much-Married Sultan.

Seventy-five wives and sixty-seven mourned the death of Sultan Ibn Saud of Nejd, leader of the fanatical Wahabis, recently. Sultan Ibn Saud was one of the Arabian chieftains to whom the British Government paid a subsidy of £60,000 a year to keep the peace in Nejd, the great Central Arabian oasis, of which he is emir. Ibn Saud also controlled most of the Arabian coast of the Persian Gulf from Koweit to Oman. For several years past Ibn Saud had been in conduct with his neighbor, King Hussein of the Hedjaz, who also received a subsidy of £60,000 a year. Both rulers were paid a lump sum of £20,000 in addition to their subsidy. These subsidies, however, were withdrawn last year. The Wahabis are a puritan Moslem sect. According to their creed drug-taking, the drinking of alcohol, and even smoking, is punishable by death. The Sultan allowed himself and his followers only one wife at a time. Divorce in his territory is simple. It is accomplished by exclaiming three times: "I divorce thee."

The Duettists.

The famous pianist, Ignace Paderewski, recently told a story reminiscent of the days when he was Prime Minister of Poland.

At that time there was much poverty in the land, and many people were driven to beg their bread from door to door.

Two of these unfortunates met at a wayside tavern at the end of a long and unsuccessful day's begging. Both were tired and hungry; both gazed with longing eyes at their empty plates and unfilled glasses.

"Didn't you have any luck?" inquired one. "What about the house I saw you looking at—the big one with the open window?"

"Didn't trouble to ask," was the reply. "I looked in the window and saw two girls playing on one piano, so I guessed that the people living there were too poor to be able to afford to help me."

Heartbside Hint.

If you stir an open fire in a grate and bring fresh coals to the front, it gives out a warmer glow. It is the same way with the sun, says C. G. Abbott, in charge of the astrophysical laboratory of the Smithsonian Institution. The so-called sun spots are produced by a stirring of the sun's outer layer. By comparing measurement of solar radiation with photographs of the sun he has found that there is an increase in heat radiated by the sun on the same days that sun spots form, grow or are brought into view on the visible disk of the sun by rotation.

Areum.

A new alloy resembling gold has been invented, and it has been called "areum." It has the brightness, durability, and inoxidability of gold.

Minister Inducted Into His New Charge.
The induction of Rev. W. T. Mackenzie, who comes from Montreal Presbytery, to the Selton and Glenvale charge, was held in Wilton church Tuesday night with a good gathering of parishioners present. Rev. B. J. Craig, clerk of the Kingston Presbytery, presided. Rev. M. Fraser, of Melrose, conducted the devotional exercises and preached the sermon, his text being, "Let the Beauty of the Lord our God be Upon Us," and his remarks dealing with the many manifestations of God in nature and men's lives. The address to the people was livered by Rev. D. T. Dancaster, of Pittsburg, who described the perils likely to be encountered by a congregation. Rev. G. A. Brown of Chalmers church, Kingston, addressed the minister, giving three headings for the guidance of his life, "Pray, Study, Give." His prayer should be communion with God, his study include not only the Bible and other books, but the lives of his parishioners. He should give his whole self, the finer qualities as well as the material. Rev. A. J. Wilson, of Napanee, interim moderator, related the steps which had been taken to fill the vacancy. Rev. C. L. Cowan, of Picton, was also present.

40,000 HARVESTERS WILL BE WANTED FOR THE WEST
At least 40,000 harvesters will be required to garner the Western Canada Wheat Crop this season, according to information received at general headquarters of the Canadian National Railways this week. The number of approximately 20,000 will have to be secured from Eastern Canada, it being thought that the remainder can be supplied by the three Prairie Provinces and British Columbia.

This information is the outcome of a conference held at Winnipeg today between Representatives of Canadian National Railways, Provincial and Federal Governments and the Labor Boards. It was also brought out at this meeting that transportation is expected to commence in Manitoba about August 20th and in Saskatchewan and Alberta about August 25th.

A further meeting is to be held about August 2nd, in Winnipeg to decide upon the date when the special rail fares for harvesters will go into effect. This date will be governed by the time when the farmers are prepared to accept harvesters. Representatives of Canadian National Railways were asked by the Government Officials to state how well they were prepared to handle this traffic and they were told that the National Railway System has approximately 400 cars, of the very latest type of colonist equipment held in readiness for the handling of the excursion. In addition there are ready for service on these trains a number of specially designed lunch counter cars, all of them larger and better equipped than any other cars of this type in the country.

HOME BANK DIRECTORS AND OFFICIALS WILL COME UP FOR TRIAL SEPT. 9TH

Toronto, July 24.—It was announced here to-day that directors and officials of the Home Bank of Canada, charged in connection with suspension of that institution last August, will face trial before Judge Emerson Coatsworth, senior judge of the county of York, on the afternoon of September 9th.

According to crown authorities, the original charges in indictment will stand, but proceedings will not be taken against A. E. Calvert, who was acting manager of the bank at the time of its suspension. He will likely be used by the crown as one of its principal witnesses. H. J. Daily, who was president of the defunct institutio, and one of the accused named in the indictment, died on June 9th.

The Stuff of Heroes.

A lumberjack, while working on a log-drive, fell into the water. He struggled at the bottom for a while, and finally got up, and, grasping a big log, held on for life.

The current was so swift that it carried his body under the log, and his feet stuck out of the water on the other side. Just as a comrade was about to grasp him by the shoulder, he gasped, looked at his own feet pityingly, and said to his rescuer:

"Don't mind me; save that fellow on the other side that's in head first."

Well-Known Dunbar Bell Ringers a Chautauqua Feature

DUNBAR MALE QUARTET AND BELL RINGERS

The Dunbar Male Quartet and Bell Ringers, who will be a feature company at the coming Dominion Chautauqua, are one of the most consistently successful musical organisations in the Lyceum and Chautauqua field.

They carry hand bells, upon which are played some of the best overtures and solo numbers. They also appear in vocal solos, quartets and readings. There is always an original dash of humor in all their programs.

No feature of their programs will be remembered longer than the beautiful chimes and harmonies which are introduced in their sacred selections.

Their original transcriptions, in which are heard excerpts of beautiful songs, sung to the accompaniment of bells, are a distinct musical treat.

Notable Potter-Craftsman at the Chautauqua

J. SMITH DAMRON

An exceptionally novel and fascinating attraction at the coming Dominion Chautauqua will be J. Smith Damron's entertainment-demonstration, "The Potter and the Clay," which gives a full and vivid portrayal of one of the oldest handicrafts known to man—the manufacture of pottery or earthenware.

In full view of his audience Mr. Damron makes vessels of clay on an old-fashioned turning-wheel, and interestingly describes the preparation of the clay, glazing, decorating and burning.

Splendid lessons on character building abound, along with much wit, humor and philosophy.

So great has been the platform success of Mr. Damron that the United States government sent him to the Panama Canal Zone to entertain government employees. He gave his entertainment fifteen times in the government club houses there.

It is very important that the folks of Napanee fully understand the matter of season ticket tax. It is exactly the same as the single admission tax and is to be paid each time the season ticket is presented for use. The holder of the season ticket buys a tax ticket for the same value as anyone buying a single admission ticket for the same program. A 25c. and 35c. admission requires a 2c. tax ticket; a 50c. and 75c. admission requires a 5c. tax ticket; and a $1.00 admission requires a 10c. tax ticket. This new regulation was passed April 29, 1924.

PRICES FOR THIS YEAR---Adult's Season Ticket $2.50; Child's Season Ticket $1.25. Amusement Tax Extra

All the members present, Mayor MacGregor in the chair.

DISCREDITED? SOMEWHAT!!

"Why keep up this rumpus about Bootleggers? The sale of wine and beer in Government Dispensaries or Standard Hotels, would cut the ground from under them. It would satisfy the moderate drinkers, without permitting drunkenness—for it is hard liquors that make drunkards."

This say some really fine folk. The only drawback to their scheme is that it was tried for a few thousand years—and it didn't work. It's a fair guess that these vendors of the Wine and Beer panacea, went to school before Scientific Temperance was on the curriculum.

THE DIFFERENCE.

What is the difference between Wine, Beer, Ale, etc., and Whiskey, Rum, Brandy, etc.?

The first are fermented drinks; and the second distilled liquors. The first case of drunkenness of which we have any written record, is to be found in the 9th chapter of Genesis—"And Noah began to be an husbandman, and he planted a vineyard, and he drank of the wine and was drunken." It was not whiskey that tripped up this good man; it was wine.

Yes, to say the least of it, the backers of fermented drinks as an antidote to drunkenness, are not bible students. Let them turn over to 1 Kings 20, where a little company of less than 8,000, put to route a huge army, officered by 32 Kings.

Why?

Because "Benhadad was drinking himself drunk in the pavilions—he and the thirty and two kings that helped him.

On beer, gin and rum?—No, nothing but wine.

"WINE IS A MOCKER"

The liquid refreshments at the feasts of Ahasuerus and Belshazzar, were all fermented. 700 years before the coming of Christ the tribe of Ephriam had become so sodden with drink, we are told that even "the priests and the prophets were swallowed up with wine; they err in vision; they stumble in judgment."

Down through the ages secular history shows society riddled by the debasing, destroying influence of fermented drinks. If Alexander the Great had not been conquered by wine, he might have conquered the world.

Rome in the middle ages came to ruin through drunkenness and lust. The descriptions of Roman feasts are unreadable.

Gin? Rum? Brandy?

No—Nothing but fermented drinks.

THE UNHAPPY DISCOVERER

Who says all this wreck of character and ruin of soul was wrought by fermented drinks?

The impeachable facts of history say so—FOR THE FIRST DROP OF DISTILLED LIQUOR EVER PRODUCED, WAS MANUFACTURED IN 1541.

Here is the story of it.

One Bombastes Paracelsus—an Italian Chemist—was, like so many scientists of his day, seeking to discover "the Elixir of Life," which would enable men to live indefinitely. Amongst other liquids he experimented with Wine. In the course of his labours he produced distilled spirits. Loudly he proclaimed to the world that he had found the Elixir.

Enamored of this decoction, Paracelsus became a slave to it. One day they found him dead alongside his barrel of "Elixir"—THE ELIXIR OF DEATH.

SIMPLE ARITHMETIC

Now substract 1541 from 1924, and what do you get?—383!!—Only 383 years since the world knew distilled or hard liquors!!

All the records of drunkenness—the sodden misery—the hideous crime and debauchery that history lays at the door of Alcohol, from Noah's day to 383 years ago, grew out of fermented, not distilled liquors.

SHALL WE TURN DOWN THE O.T.A. FOR THIS DISCREDITED REMEDY?

Beaver Returning to Kansas.

The beaver, which was once very numerous in the plains country of Kansas, but disappeared entirely from the state about twenty years ago, is now moving back.

He shuns settlements, but nowhere in America is he safe from settlements. This busy architect of pond and stream must have come to a realization of this fact and so returned to a more favored land.

There are beaver scattered all along the Kansas-Nebraska line. There are also beaver on the Blue and a few on the Solomon and Smoky Hill. A colony migrated from Colorado a year ago and settled on the property near Ford, Kan., south of Dodge City, and there is another colony near Syracuse. A colony is reported in the neighborhood of Sterling on the Arkansas river.

They are protected by the Kansas State law, it being unlawful to trap one, have either the pelt or the body in one's possession or to destroy a beaver dam or house. Four Kansans have paid fines this winter for violating the law protecting them and two other cases of reported violations are being investigated by the fish and game department, according to J. B. Doze, warden. "If Kansas will conserve the stock it has now, within a few years a crop of beaver pelts worth $10,000 or perhaps $100,000 could be taken," says the warden.

The Outsider

By FLORENCE WARDEN

Author of "The House on the Marsh," "Something in the City," "No. 3, The Square," "The Lovely Mrs. Pembe.ton," "Our Widow," Etc.

"Or any woman who would have a good influence over him," said Carrie. "Some girl like you and your sisters, for instance."

Jean laughed a little, and reddened slightly.

"It won't be for want of trying if one of us doesn't," she remarked, with a sly look.

Carrie laughed more heartily than she had yet done, and Jean went on:—

"Of course we're not adventuresses, are we? Although we spend our live hoping to secure rich husbands, and doing our best to fulfil those hopes!"

"Not you," said Carrie, shaking her head with conviction.

"Oh, personally I'm too old and too ugly," replied Jean, calmly. "But I join in the chase on behalf of the others with right good-will. It appears to be the career we are born to, all we girls who are brought up on great pretensions and a small income. And yet we are supposed to have the right to look down upon the girls who earn their own livings and to call them adventuresses if they dare to enter the lists against us and to join in the chase of the rich man!"

Carrie laughed again softly.

"I've often had thoughts like that, but I never expected to hear them put into words by a woman in your position. I wish poor Dick could marry you!"

"I'm afraid 'poor Dick' wouldn't thank you for the suggestion. I'm strongly inclined to think it will presently be your duty to marry him yourself."

Carrie shuddered and sprang up.

"Fortunately," said she, "Dr. Folgate will be already doing his best to make that impossible."

"I hope not," said Jean, rising too, and laying a detaining hand upon the other's arm. "Don't think me impertinent, but I am older than you, much older, and I tell you the material comforts of life are worth considering."

Carrie turned upon her with such a sudden change of expression as let her companion into some of the secrets of her past life.

"Do you think I don't know that?" she said in a hoarse whisper.

They exchanged one look of confession on the one side, of comprehension on the other. And then, side by side, without speaking, but in the comforting harmony of mutual respect and good-will, they both went out of the room, and separated with just a nod and a smile.

In the meantime, as Carrie had predicted, Dr. Folgate had lost no time in sending out that telegram, and in giving him such an account of the scene in the salon as should inflame the young man's jealousy of Lorimer and of Carrie, by a subtle suggestion of a league formed by them against Dick and the doctor himself.

"For some reason or other both your young friends resent my joining your party," he said, very sulky with an aggrieved air. "I'm sure I've done my best to keep out of their way; I have refused even to leave my own hotel for you. I can't understand their animosity."

"They think—Carrie thinks you let me do as I like too much," said Dick, tersely.

He was in a penitential mood, and inclined to be lugubriously outspoken. The doctor frowned slightly.

"I certainly haven't presumed to attempt to keep you in leading strings," he said, assuming an air of injured dignity. "I should have thought it a great liberty to take with a man who was repaying my own interest in him with generous acknowledgment."

Dick liked the subtle flattery of this speech, and he nodded, with a wave of the hand, to intimate that his profusion was nothing.

"Still, I'm sorry you don't get on better with little Carrie," he said warmly, "and I can't quite understand what the quarrel was all about. I must speak to Lorimer."

The doctor was by no means anxious that the friends should meet and explain matters, but he could not prevent it. Dick was in one of his stubborn moods, so he went off at once in search of his late fellow-clerk, with the result that the tables were completely turned upon the doctor.

Dick Desborough rushed off in search of him, and poured forth such a torrent of excited eloquence that the other could only listen and make vain attempts to stem its course.

"You dare to call my sister an adventuress, to make mischief by your wretched hints and insinuations!" cried Dick, his face livid and his hands clenched. "You dare to insult her and annoy her! By jove, I've a good mind to follow Seeley's example and knock you down myself!"

"Oh, amuse yourself in that way if you like," said the other, coolly, casually putting a heavy armchair between himself and the excited young man as he spoke. "In the usual reward one gets in this world for doing one's duty by one's friends. If the girl were really your sister it would be different."

"No, it wouldn't," retorted Dick. "If she were really my sister she'd be more entitled to a man's respect, and I'm pretty sure you're man of the world enough to know that. Anyhow, I'm not going to put up with rudeness to Carrie; so, if you please, doctor, we'll consider our arrangements for going on together to Paris at an end."

Dr. Folgate looked rather blue, but he only bowed, and stammered out something about its being as Dick pleased; for himself, he was only too glad to be relieved of a self-imposed duty which was entailing a great sacrifice.

"H'm!" said Dick, rudely.

The doctor drew himself up, and there was a vicious gleam n his eyes as he added,—

"Mr Mrs. Parkin does come after you, as she threatened to do"—Dick's expression changed, and he grew perceptibly paler,—"put a bold face on it, make the best terms you can. Above all, don't threaten her, for by this time she may have found out her little dancer flies to of her being proceeded against on suspicion of murder."

Dick tried to assume an air of indifference, but it was a very successful one.

"Oh, there'd nothing in it. She won't come after me," he said with a sort of stubborn jauntiness.

But he did not feel at ease, especially as the reply Dr. Folgate made was to shrug his shoulders as he left the room.

CHAPTER XII.

Dick Desborough was one of those impulsive persons whose ebullitions of passion die away very quickly; and no sooner was Dr. Folgate out of the room than he fell into an abject state of depression and fear, in which terror, lest the doctor should withdraw his support, mingled with a sort of resentment against Lorimer and Carrie for being the cause of this disturbance.

It was in the doctor's own room at his hotel that this excited colloquy had taken place; and there was nothing for Dick to do but to follow him out and downstairs. Dick went so slowly, however, in his indecisions as to what he should say when he came to grips with Lorimer, that both the doctor altogether, and had to go back to his own hotel without having seen him.

It was so late by this time that everybody had gone to bed, and he was obliged to follow their example, in a very doleful and very unhappy frame of mind.

On the following morning he came down to breakfast in a very sulky humor. Not one of the morning headaches which his dissipations with the doctor had so often produced had brought him so feeling like the stolen and forlorn condition to which he was now reduced. He scowled at Carrie and then at Lorimer; but they, perhaps prepared for such a state of things, were so kindly, so cordial, and pointed so invitingly to a seat they had left for him between them, that he was mollified against his will, and began to eat his buttered roll and drink his coffee with more appetite than he had expected.

"The coffee is lovely here, isn't it?" cooed Carrie, who had no more original remark ready, but who managed to infuse into these simple words an air of affectionate interest which disarmed the sulky Dick.

"It's just as well that it should be nice," retorted he dismally, "for it's precious likely it'll be the last we shall ever have to do with."

The depths of depression audible in his tone were more laughable than affecting, if he had only known it.

But Carrie went on in the same soothing tone as before.

"Oh no. We're not all going to throw ourselves into the sea, are we?"

"Dunno," replied Dick, with everincreasing dismalness; "don't know but what it would be the best thing we could do, all of us!"

"Speak for yourself, old chap!" said Lorimer, with what seemed to his companion aggressive cheerfulness.

Dick retorted sharply.

"Oh, you're all right, you've nothing to lose by offending the doctor. You can take Carrie's part, and put on airs of doing a fine thing and all that, and make a penny the more! But as for me, I shouldn't be at all surprised if the talking to I gave him yesterday, and my taking her part and shutting him up, and ordering him away—I shouldn't be surprised, I if they've cost me a hundred and fifty thousand pounds."

"Draw it mild, old man!" put in Lorimer with irritating calmness.

Dick turned upon him fiercely.

"Don't you believe me? Well, you'll have to presently, when you see me collared by this woman and forced to give up every cent."

"Anyhow, you have, Dick," answered Lorimer, "you've made yourself pretty safe by the amount you borrowed and brought away with you. It would take a terrible persuasion to make you give up that!"

A faint smile overspread Dick's pale face and then instantly disappeared.

"Well, you needn't let everybody know that I've so much value about me," he retorted in a low voice. "It's not prudent. Why, I haven't even told the doctor that."

"But I daresay he's found out," retorted Lorimer.

Dick frowned.

"Well, you needn't worry your head about him any longer," he said, decidedly. "And as for you and your pr-judice against him," he went on, turning to Carrie, "you ought to be satisfied now. I stood up for you yesterday, told him I wouldn't hear a word from anybody except in your praise, and told him so forcibly, mind you, that he marched off in a rage, and he's going back to England at once."

"Hooray!" cried Lorimer.

"It isn't hooray!" snapped Dick, savagely. "It a beastly nuisance, and it'll mean that he'll send this woman over and set her on to worry me, and in the end to ruin me."

Lorimer grew grave.

"If she is Mrs. Parkin—" he began.

"It isn't Mrs. Parkin," bellowed Dick, to the astonishment of some people who were breakfasting at the other end of the table.

"Then why trouble about it?" suggested Carrie, softly. "I shouldn't, if I were you, Dick; don't meet trouble half way. If there were anything in this tory she would have have heard something of it through the lawyers, wouldn't you?"

But Dick was too fearful to admit this. They had not been at Ostend a month yet, and she would want a few weeks to make up her mind as to her mode of attack. That was what Dick said, and he would not be comforted at the loss of his ally.

"And are you sure he's really gone?" suggested Carrie, with some astuteness.

"Quite sure," said Dick, in a gruff voice; "hasn't he always been rodnd in the morning before this to see me?"

The others were silent. Dr. Folgate had indeed been very assiduous in his attentions. But nothing Dick could say sufficed to convince them that the doctor's going away was anything but a piece of good fortune, and in the end they contrived, Lorimer by a steady optimism, and Carrie by pretty, coaxing ways, to bring him into a more cheerful frame of mind.

One result of this, however, was an unwelcome one to Carrie. Dick felt rather inclined to resent the way that his recent constant companion was away; and he at once proposed that she should go with him to Blankenberghe for the day reminding her sharply, when she demurred, that she visited Bruges alone with Lorimer often enough.

Carrie flushed and protested.

"But that," said she, "was because you were surrounded by the Basings, and we were obliged to go. I asked you to come with us! And, oh, don't let us spoil the day by separating!"

"It would spoil it for me," retorted Dick. "And if all you've been saying about your gladness that the doctor's gone is true, you ought not to feel that it will be spoiled for him either! If you say that Folgate's influence was bad for me, you ought to be glad that your influence will have a chance!"

Carrie laughed, but not lightheartedly.

"Surely," said she, "you can get on quite well without anybody's influence but your own, Dick!"

"That's just what I can't do, I'm afraid," retorted he. "And anyhow, after I've put myself into the greatest danger by taking your part, you can do as much for me."

Strong of nerve and self-reliant as Carrie's experience had made her, she felt the most extraordinary reluctance to grant this wish, or to submit to obey this command. Lorimer, on his side, while he felt that he had no proper claim for his assistance, was clearly disturbed and displeased by the proposal. But Dick made himself so unpleasant in his reproaches to them both, that they were so roundly of having deceived him, and of being secretly engaged to each other all the time, that they were forced into the matter short by consenting to go.

And then the sudden look of agony she saw in Lorimer's eyes made her stop short and begin again, with humor. Not one of the morning headaches which his dissipations with the doctor had so often produced had brought him so feeling like the stolen and forlorn condition to which he was now reduced. He scowled at Carrie and then at Lorimer; but they, perhaps prepared for such a state of things, were so kindly, so cordial, and pointed so invitingly to a seat they had left for him between them, that he was mollified against his will, and began to eat his buttered roll and drink his coffee with more appetite than he had expected.

Health Restored by The Fruit Treatment

Fourteen years ago, Mr. James S. Delgaty, of Gilbert Plains, Man., was a nervous wreck. His system was shattered by Nervous Prostration, and he was reduced in weight from 170 to 115 pounds.

He wrote on May 15th, 1917, "Every medicine I tried proved useless until a friend induced me to take 'Fruit-a-tives.' I began to mend at once. After using this fruit medicine for three months I was back to health. I have never had such good health as I have enjoyed the past six years. We are never without a box of 'Fruit-a-tives' in the house."

Writing again on September 27th, 1923, Mr. Delgaty says, "I stand by my letter of May 15, 1917—I still recommend 'Fruit-a-tives'."

"Fruit-a-tives" is a complete fruit treatment—being made of the juices of fresh ripe fruits and tonics.

25c. and 50c. a box—6 for $2.50—at druggists or sent postpaid by Fruit-a-tives Limited, Ottawa.

for I'll marry you, there! Take you to the Consul's, and marry you right off, and then we shall have the laugh of him after all!"

"Oh, but we wouldn't do that!" said Carrie, turning pale, and uncomfortably conscious that it was her very reluctance to marry Lorimer, that made her wooer ardent. "You know you don't want to marry a girl like me, who's quite ignorant of the world you want to live in. One of Lady Basing's daughters would suit you better, who's in society already. They're nice girls, all of them."

"Nice enough, yes," said Dick, complacently. "But they do chivy a fellow so; never leave him alone for a single day. And I thank you heartily for it."

"And you might have such a lot of time to yourself," continued Carrie, replied Dick in a thick-voiced but effusive whisper.

But Carrie was absorbed by that time in the scenery, and ignored that remark also.

It was still, of course, full day; but the sun was about to disappear, though they had to hurry back to the hotel to dress for dinner. As they walked along the wide market-place, it will not, and you shall see what a good husband I'll make; settle down and all that, and we'll be happier together than you have ever been in your life. I couple of years a year to it upon some slum!"

"Well, then, it it over, think it over," said she, tactfully, "and don't be so silly as to take any such step in a hurry."

"Oh, I have thought it over, and I'm certain that I can't live without you, and I tell you Seeley thinks so too."

Again the mention of Lorimer's name made her shrink, and of course this roused Dick's anger afresh, and there ensued another scene of anger on the one side, soothing on the other, followed by fresh protestations of affection. Carrie was quite glad when they reached Blankenberghe and got out of the train; but fresh trials were in store for her. In the first place, Dick insisted on her walking arm-in-arm with him, and was so obtrusively affectionate as to imperil her liking for him by exciting the remarks of the passers-by.

In vain she remonstrated.

"What will any of the Ostend people think, who may happen to be here to-day, if they hear you bawling out your intention to marry me, when they have supposed you to be my brother? What will they think now? Won't you run a great risk of getting me at least turned out of the hotel?"

But this, to Dick's not over-sensitive mind, only appeared a huge joke.

"Why, then I shouldn't have an excuse for marrying you off-hand, and you wouldn't be able to put me off any longer!" cried he in ecstasies over the notion. "And you should have all the Basing girls for bridesmaids. And wouldn't you be able to crow over them, when they've been so anxious to have me kept in the family?"

"I don't want to crow over them. They're very nice girls, and—"

"There, that'll do. I didn't bring you here to talk about the Basings. Let's go down on the front and look about us." So they went to the promenade and admired the lovely stretch of smooth sand, and the row of bright, cleanlooking bathing-machines, and the pier, and the pretty villas with their toy-like appearance.

And then Dick made her choose one of the hotels along the front for them to refresh themselves at. And they sat down at one of the tables outdoor, and being just in time for the table-d'hote, enjoyed a meal which at the more ostentatious Ostend would have been called luncheon, but which, at the homelier water-place, was the principal meal of the day.

And Dick distinguished himself by his ostentatious treatment of the cheapness of the dinner, for all the world as if it would not have seemed to him a sumptuous banquet a few short weeks ago.

And he exclaimed at the inferiority of the wine they brought him, though it was the best they had. And it was at this point that Carrie's patience gave out, and she began, as Dick put it, "to make herself disagreeable."

"Do you really know the difference between the wines, except by the prices, Dick?" she asked straightforwardly.

"Of course I do. What a question!" replied he, reddening a little. "What makes you say such silly things as that? It isn't like you!"

But Carrie went on imperturbably.

"When you ordered a better wine just now, and said the first wasn't fit to drink, I saw the waiter bring a bottle with just the same seal, only he broke it before you could see that it was the same. And you said the wine was much better. And then he went in and laughed with the other waiter."

Dick frowned for a moment, then he snapped his fingers.

"Well, I don't care!" cried he. "Let them think I like the wine the better for having a higher price put on it! Perhaps I do. It's the same thing with the women, anyhow. I like them the better when they put a high price on themselves, even if they're none the better all the time."

At this home thrust it was Carrie's turn to grow angry, and a certain antagonism rose up between them, of which she was rather glad. For his head had been so constantly in her plate that she was apt to make but little progress, and her appetite was good after the long train journey.

After dinner, however, he became affectionate again, and even maudlin in his laments at her lack of feeling. So that finally she was forced to tell him a hundred times that she was enjoying herself just as much as she had done at Bruges with Lorimer, it began to be patent that this was a perversions of the truth; and then Dick turned sulky, and said nasty things about Lorimer, which no one knew so precious well how to take care of themselves that it was no pleasure to do anything for them."

But through all these trifling trials Carrie managed to enjoy herself reasonably well, telling herself all the time that the disadvantages there might be to endure here, there would be a great many more to put up with when she should be back again at the "hall," earning a meagre livelihood with her miserable mandolin.

For after all, the sun was bright, and she was well-dressed, and people threw admiring glances at her graceful figure, now set off by smart and well-fitting clothes. And she had not little share of that vanity without which woman is usually a dowdy and unattractive creature, and even a demonstrative lover, such as Dick was, is better than none at all; while the place and its homely crowd of holiday-makers, Germans and Belgians, with their clumsy figures and ill-hung skirts, was bright and pleasant, and, above all, quite strange.

And when they got into the little train again and began their journey back among the sand-hills, with the faint sea-breeze blowing in their face, she drew a little sigh and looked out.—

"There's one more nice day to remember! Thank heaven for it!"

Poor Dick was peering tenderly up into her face in a moment.

"Then you have enjoyed it really? That you've had a really jolly day with me? Haven't missed Seeley a bit, eh?"

That last and most delicate question she ignored.

"I really have," said she, gently, "had a most delightful day. And I thank you heartily for it."

"And you might have such a lot of them, if you only would," replied Dick in a thick-voiced but effusive whisper.

But Carrie was absorbed by that time in the scenery, and ignored that remark also.

It was still, of course, full day; but the sun was about to disappear, though they had to hurry back to the hotel to dress for dinner. "The Dunlop Trail"

Summer Resorts of Ontario in a Nutshell for the Motorist.

"The Dunlop Trail" is the "new-idea" touring book, which represents the first attempt to lay Ontario before the holiday-seeker in such a way that he can motor over the Province systematically.

The whole story of Ontario is told in sequence—Ontario from Winnipeg to Cochrane, to Windsor, to Montreal—yet the book only comprises forty pages, and is pocket size.

Not a reference page from cover to cover—in other words, you get the whole story of a district when you are at the two pages covering that particular district. No advertising of any kind in "The Dunlop Trail."

All maps and illustrations specially drawn; all material specially compiled. Think of this feature. All your mileage figured out for you over the entire Province—the first time this has been attempted in the history of motoring.

In "The Dunlop Trail" you find every River and Lake trip in Ontario that has a schedule; also special Train trips; combination Auto, Boat and Train trips; the first complete list ever published of places in Ontario where Summer Hotels are located; every Golf Club and Camp Site in the Province, and real information, where you want it, about steamer and ferry services for taking autos aboard.

In order to keep the circulation of "The Dunlop Trail" in the proper channel a nominal price of fifty cents has been put on it. Any Garage or Tire Dealer in Ontario will take your order for "The Dunlop Trail" or you can procure it direct from this Company at any of the Ontario Offices mentioned below.

"MARCH WITH ME."

Words of Melody Sung by Beatrice Little as "Britannia."

While every number of "Charlot's Revue of 1924," in which Beatrice Lillie appears, is permeated with her delicious sense of comedy, there is no unit of the revue which made such a big hit in New York as her broad burlesque of "Britannia" in her "March With Me" feature, the lyrics of which were written by Douglas Furber and are as follows:

When all the roast beef in the world is eaten
We still shall teach our sons to play the man,
And Britain will be one united empire
From Liverpool to far Saskatchewan.
There are British boys in Montreal and Malta,
Who know the work a Briton has to do.
There are British boys in Cairo and Calcutta
And even Brooklyn still has one or two.

March with me to the roll of the drum,
March to that rousin' tune.
March with me to the call of the fife,
March—March—April, May and June.
Canada! Australia! South Africa!
To merely name a few—
So turn again, Whittington, Lord Mayor of London,
England is proud of you!

We may have lost at tennis and at cricket,
They say at sport our end is drawing near,
But we hold the open championship at Ludo
And I know we win the boat race every year.
No call to arms shall even find us wanting,
At least it hasn't found us wanting yet,
So we'll drink a toast and then we'll drink another
For we keep the dear Old Country nice and wet,
We'll rally round the standard without fail,
And those who do not rally round "The Standard"
May go and rally round "The Daily Mail."

March with me to the roll of the drum,
March to that rousin' tune.
March with me to the call of the fife,
March—March—April, May and June.
Southada! Cantralia! Ausafrica!
To merely name a few—
Thirty days hath September, April June and November,
England is proud of you!

Patrick Campbellisms.

Mrs. Patrick Campbell compares a fine, heated discussion with a game of tennis. She also declares: "A child speaks the truth from want of guile. Men and women speak it in despair."

And here are two more extracts:

"I insist that I have found the manners of American men more kindly; of Frenchmen more courteous; of Englishmen more sincere; and of Irishmen—God defend us!"

"I once asked a kind veterinary surgeon why dogs were so much nicer than people. His answer was: 'Nearly all bad dogs are drowned; all mad dogs are shot.'"

WHY WOMEN GAMBLE.

Female Is Sometimes More Sporting Than the Male.

The wife of a clerk who earned four pounds a week told me recently that she regarded her bets as a sort of savings bank, says a writer in Answers. It was the only way she could be sure of getting a decent lump sum together.

Long ago she tried to save by putting a few shillings a week in the post office, but before many weeks were over she always had to draw it all out for something or other. The money she put on horses she couldn't get back if she wanted it, and "one can't be unlucky all the time. When I won a bit it was generally worth having," she declared.

That's one way of looking at the question, and so long as she lost her own money, and nobody else's, she had a right to her own way.

Another woman thought that all wives should know something about horse-racing, because those who did could discuss the question with their husbands, and so prevent their going out at night to "talk racing" with their men friends.

"Nothing pleases my hubby more than when I give him a shilling or two to try my luck," she added, declaring at the same time that she never risked more than a certain sum.

She admitted that it was impossible really to tell which horse would win, but she thought if one knew a little of the turf, and the age and weight of the various racers, one was sure to pick up a bit of money now and then. Taking the whole of last year she had only dropped 15s., and she had pounds' worth of fun out of her bets.

Indeed, from my chats with various women, I learnt that it is chiefly the joy of anticipation and the excitement that causes them to bet.

That's all very well for those who some strength of character and don't ruin themselves or others by betting when they can't spare the cash. But for the weak-willed it may be worse than taking strong drink. A drunkard has been known to pull up, but an inveterate gambler is invariably ruined before the habit is cured.

At the same time, from a tour of poor and middle-class neighborhoods, I am glad to find that there is little truth in the report that bookies tout round among the workers' wives to get them to bet behind their husbands' backs. Only two women owned that they had been visited by a "bookie," and in one instance the "bookie" herself was a woman.

A grocer was recently fined for taking betting slips, and it transpired that they were collected by the errand boy on his rounds. The bosses of all the women from whom he collected them were neat and clean, and no one at home had suffered from the "game."

According to one London business man, his office staff talk more about betting than about their work, and one of them has actually taught his wife to bet. Well, I'm not going to contradict him flatly, but I have my own opinion as to his veracity.

One of the great objections to women betting is that they don't stop at racing bets. They will bet on anything, from the weather to the postmark on the first letter opened in an office. It would surprise some of my readers to know the amount of money that passed between women in bets as to who would form our new Parliament.

"Stating what one thinks is so dull. One gets a bit of 'pep' in a subject when it ends in a bet and a handshake," remarked a woman who was betting on losing or winning an action she was refinging. You see, she planned to win something, either way!

In Mid-Victorian days, when a woman who even so much as knew the name of a race or a horse was considered "fast" and "flighty," she never was expected to pay up if she lost. The woman who bets to-day "plays the game." She waxes very indignant if anyone suggests jetting her on what she regards as a debt of honor.

But, when all is said and done, betting is a "mug's game," for women as well as for men. The only people who thrive on it are the "bookies."

Joke Was on Him.

Sir Thomas Lipton relates a story which he seems to think is against himself.

"I visited Burma some years ago," he says, "and happened to be present at a great religious function. Amongst the Buddhist priests was one who kept glaring at me until I became almost nervous. Suddenly he came forward and exclaimed: 'How the deuce did you get here, Lipton?'"

You may imagine my surprise when I found that the 'priest' was an Englishman I had previously known. He had been shipwrecked on the Burmese coast and had turned native.'

"I invited him to call and see me, but he refused. 'I never mix with Christians now,' he explained. 'But it is me you are coming to see,' I replied. 'Oh, well, that's a different thing,' was the startling answer."

The Myth of the Stupid Ostrich.

"Once upon a time," writes Vilhjalmur Stefansson in the Spectator, "there were two regions of the earth where any fabulous story might be safely located, both because their character was well known and because they were so remote and inaccessible that disproof was not easy. These were the tropics and the Arctic." Concerning one of these myths he says:

"Of all the stories of animal stupidity none has been more accepted and popular than that of the ostrich. The belief is widely held that it can be a civil force in uniform, not as a military organization with army regulations, but dependent for discipline upon the personality of the leader, the temptation to call that would be generated, and the 'noblesse oblige' idea that would emerge in the course of one service. All these things actually developed."

By October of that year, 1873, writes Mr. MacBeth, "three Divisions, A, B and C, consisting of some fifty men each, were mobilized at the historical Lower Fort Garry, some twenty miles down the Red river from Upper Fort Garry, where Winnipeg now stands.

The command of this small body of men, the nucleus of a larger force, was given to Lieut.-Col. (later A. French, of the Royal Artillery and of the School of Gunnery, Kingston, Ont., and he proceeded to Manitoba to take up the work.

In the spring three more Divisions were mobilized in Toronto, carrying the police alphabet on to E. and F., and two appointments were then made of men who afterwards became famous in the western country—James Farquharson Macleod to be Assistant Commissioner, and James Morrow Walsh to be an Inspector. Macleod and Fort Walsh, in the foothills of the Rockies, in after years, testified to the type of the work done by these two gallant men.

At that time the prairies were uninhabited except for wandering bands of Indians, some half-breeds, and scattered traders and trappers, and here and there a missionary. Each division had to carry all its own equipment and ample rations to provide against contingencies and to supply such needy inhabitants as were some upon.

Buffaloes were still numerous, but the herds were already rapidly decreasing in number and size, and at times were hard to come upon.

Canadian National Appointment.

Mr. William U. Appleton, who has been appointed general manager of the Atlantic region of the Canadian National Railways, in succession to the late A. E. Brownell, a native of the Maritime Provinces, and has spent his whole life there.

He was born at Moncton, N.B., on January 29, 1878, and joined the Intercolonial Railway as a junior clerk on October 13, 1890.

Church In Two Counties.

An old London church, All Hallows, Eng., of which Prebendary Fowler, Bt., is the rector, is threatening to collapse, and considerable outlay will be required to make it unsable. A fact not generally known to Londoners is that before he can enter the pulpit, the rector has to pass into another parish. Access to the pulpit is only obtained through the vestry, and part of it is just beyond the boundary line of All Hallows. This is believed to be unique.

Australia's Population.

Australia's population is estimated at 5,688,092, representing an increase of 252,353 since the last official census of 1921. The male sex predominates in the Commonwealth, there being 2,897,047 as against 2,791,045 females.

CANADIAN "MOUNTIES"

WERE FORMED ABOUT FIFTY YEARS AGO.

This Body of Men Have a Brilliant Record — Prairies Were uninhabited Except for Wandering Indians When Mounted Police Entered Upon Duties.

In the history of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police the present year is worthy of special note, because it completes a half-century of service for the people of Canada. To be sure, since the first "Riders of the Plains" appeared on the banks of the Assiniboine and among the foothills of the Rockies, the name of the force has been changed, but there has been unbroken continuity in the life of the organization and in its record, which will ever shine forth from the pages of Canadian history.

At its organization and for some time after, the name of the force was the North West Mounted Police. Then permission was given to prefix the work Royal. This was in 1904, when signal honor was done the force by the late King Edward VII., who gave his personal recognition of the splendid service of the Police by conferring on it the title of Royal.

An Act of Federal Parliament, passed during the session of 1919, widened the jurisdiction of the force so as to include all Canada, and, of course, thereby increased its duties. This particularly necessitated a broadening of the name, which was changed to Royal Canadian Mounted Police, a name at first strange but with which the public are becoming familiar.

It is the first chapter in the force's bright record of half a century of service that is being reviewed, especially in the West, where celebrations will be held.

The short but disturbing reign of anarchy set up by Louis Riel on the banks of the Red river in the autumn of 1869, and continued for about a year, taught the Government of Canada several important and expensive lessons. One was the imperative need of an adequate military or police force in the newly acquired Rupert's Land, then coming to be known as the Canadian West.

When Parliament met in the session of 1873, the report of Col. Robertson-Ross and the whole question of maintaining law and order in the West were under consideration by the Federal Government, of which Sir John Macdonald was Prime Minister.

Among the members who pressed the matter were Dr. Schultz, (later Sir John), who had been under sentence of death by Riel, but escaped, and the Hon. Alexander Mackenzie, who became Prime Minister a few months later.

Sir John Macdonald replied that the Government had decided to establish a mobile armed force to preserve law and order throughout the West. On May 3, a bill to this effect was introduced by Sir John. Within a few weeks the bill had passed both Houses and had received royal assent. And so one late existence the necessary legal foundation on which was built up the North-West Mounted Police.

The Rev. R. G. MacBeth, the well-known historian of the West, points out that at its outset the police "was to be a civil force in uniform, not a military organization with army regulations, but dependent for discipline upon the personality of the leader, the temptation to call that would be generated, and the 'noblesse oblige' idea that would emerge in the course of one service. All these things actually developed."

By October of that year, 1873, writes Mr. MacBeth, "three Divisions, A, B and C, consisting of some fifty men each, were mobilized at the historical Lower Fort Garry, some twenty miles down the Red river from Upper Fort Garry, where Winnipeg now stands.

The command of this small body of men, the nucleus of a larger force, was given to Lieut.-Col. (later A. French, of the Royal Artillery and of the School of Gunnery, Kingston, Ont., and he proceeded to Manitoba to take up the work.

TO WOMEN OF MIDDLE AGE

This Woman's Letter Tells You How To Pass The Crisis Safely.

Lascelles, P.Q.—"During the Change of Life I felt so weak and run down I could hardly do my work. The perspiration would pour over me, and so that I couldn't see what I was doing. We live on a farm, so there is lots to do, but many who felt as I did would have been in bed. I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and it did me a world of good. I tried other remedies but I put Vegetable Compound ahead of them all, and I tell every one I know how much good it has done me."—Mrs. DUNCAN BROWN, Lascelles, Prov. Quebec.

Such warning symptoms as sense of suffocation, hot flashes, headaches, backaches, dread of impending evil, timidity, sounds in the ear, palpitation of the heart, sparks before the eyes, irregularities, constipation, variable appetite, weakness and dizziness should be heeded by middle-aged women, and let Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound carry them safely through this crisis as it did Mrs. Brown.

You are invited to write for free advice

No other medicine has been so successful in relieving woman's suffering as has Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. Women may receive free and helpful advice by writing the Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co., Lynn, Mass.

LIGHTS THAT SAVE LIVES.

On Lizard Head, Stands one of Great est Lighthouses in World.

To know what the Lizard light means to ships and seamen you have to come up the Channel on a pitch dark wintry night, says Answers. Similarly, to know what the immensely powerful siren means, you must sail up the Channel in a terrific storm and thick white mist, which do not allow you to see a yard in front of you.

Then you will bless the man who first put a light on the great headland, and the siren which booms so powerfully across the waters.

There are no fewer than 500 steps on the top of the Lizard, but now one is found to be sufficient, owing to the great increase in illuminating power obtained by electric lights and modern lenses.

The Lizard light is equal to that of approximately 20,000,000 candles! It shows out at sea for a distance of thirty-five miles; but its reflection in the sky on a clear night has been seen close upon a hundred miles away.

The wonderful lenses, in the form of a four-sided lantern made up of curved prisms along each side, with the electric light in the middle of the lantern, are of French invention and manufacture, and cost £3,000. The white light they throw gleams across the waters every three seconds.

The lens mechanism which takes turns of four hours each. It is hardly necessary to say that every part of the lighthouse, the machinery, lenses, etc., is kept polished and clean as human hands can make it.

The top of the Lizard promontory is not at all a desirable spot to those who have not been there might imagine. There is a church, a Methodist chapel, three or four fine hotels, and a number of comfortable houses. A sight not to be missed in the summer is the beautiful lane of fuchsias, growing to a height on each side of you, several feet high, and with millions of flowers on them—a spectacle to be seen perhaps nowhere else, even Cornwall!

But, of course, there is the other side of the picture—that which explains the origin of the Lizard light! There are the rocky cliffs, the deep caves, the ancient wrecks, all kinds of ships breaking up before the force of those mighty waves.

When you see these wrecks, when you stand by the lighthouse and can not even see the end of the building for the rain and mist, when you listen to the booming of the siren every minute or so, for twenty-four hours at a stretch, till your ears and mind are all in a whirl from it, then your thoughts are not of the flowery lanes, but of the stark, devouting sea.

Brigand Visits Pola.

An Istrian brigand, named Collarig, whom the Istrian police have been trying to capture for several months and for whose head a price of $2,000 made an appearance at Pola, the Italian naval base in the Adriatic, recently. Collarig in his latest exploit presented himself at the house of a local business man, under a false name. When the brigand was face to face with his host he disclosed his identity. This time Collarig came in the interests of a cook, Signor Pelaschiar's cook in fact, whom the Istrian desired after some reason or other about to discharge. This cook is an old sweetheart of Collarig, it appears, and maybe the brigand recalled with sentiment and pleasure some of her culinary handiwork. He warned Pelaschiar that he must on no account dismiss the cook. If he did, there would be troubles worse than indigestibn. Then warning the business man not to notify any one for at least half an hour, Collarig departed, telling his host before he went that when he was tired of being in hiding he would give himself up and let the $2,000 go to the local poor.

Insured Against Marriage.

Most of things connected with Pola Negri are out of the ordinary, and her insurance policy is no exception to the rule. She is a beauty—a temperamental actress and a vamp of the first order, this lovely star is insured against the inroads of Hymen. Publicity that would prevent her from appearing before the camera.

Originally her insurance was taken out in Germany for one million marks, but as the value of this policy at the present rate of exchange is nil, her beauty is now adequately protected by an American insurance company.

When "The Negri" first reached America it was stated that her management took out a policy against her marriage, arguing that it would spoil her value as a vamp-star. Pola said this was not the case, but insurance men showed considerable alarm over her romantic engagement to Charles Chaplin, now, apparently, at an end.

KITCHEN BUTTER

Preparing Butter for Showing at Fall Fairs

Clean Cows, Stables and Utensils—The Score Card—Keep Cream Cool—About Coloring — Have Neat Packages—Cause of Lump Jaw.

(Contributed by Ontario Department of Agriculture, Toronto.)

During the next few weeks the fall fairs will be on all over the Province. This means that many of the people on our farms will be very busy preparing their exhibits.

Butter is one of the many things that will require attention, because every buttermaker wants to make a creditable showing.

Clean, Cows, Stables and Utensils.

Have the stables, cows and all utensils clean, and do not feed the cows anything that might give an undesirable flavor to the butter. The judge will take particular attention to the flavor, and it is given 45 out of the 100 points on the score card.

Churn the cream sweet, or with low acidity, as that is what is wanted by most judges.

Keep the cream cool and churn at a temperature low enough to bring the butter in nice, firm granules in from twenty to twenty-five minutes.

A lot of butter shown at our rural fairs is made from cream insufficiently cooled, and is churned at too high a temperature. Because of this the body is weak and the color pale, or if the salt is unevenly distributed, the butter will be streaky.

Points on the Score Card.

All of these things are considered by the judge, as is shown by the score card, which read as follows:

Flavor	45
Texture	15
Incorporation of moisture	10
Color	10
Salt	10
Packing	10
Total	100

Keep the Cream Cool.

If the weather is warm, the ice supply exhausted, and the water not cold enough to lower the cream to the required temperature, it would be well to get a piece of ice to cool the "exhibition" cream and the water used for washing the butter.

This butter will be firm enough to stand sufficient working, and it will have better body and texture, improved color and more even distribution of the salt.

About Coloring.

If it should be necessary to add a few drops of coloring to the cream be careful not to add too much. Better have the butter pale than to have it highly colored.

Do not wait until the morning of the fair to churn the cream. The butter will be in better condition and will score higher if it is made two or three days before. This will give it time to become "ripe," and the flavor of the butter and salt will be blended.

Have Neat Packages.

The packages must be as neat and tidy as it is possible to make them. Use a box or crock that looks new. A chipped or cracked crock will reduce the score under the heading of "packing."

When a person has made an effort to make a good product he has a feeling of satisfaction even though he does not win a prize. There is always this fact to bear in mind—the prizes are few in number but the competitors are often many.—Belle Millar, O. A. College, Guelph.

More Poultry Pointers.

Crows are likely to steal the eggs from the late turkey nests if the nests are made at some distance from the buildings.

Be sure that the young growing chicks are well fed to promote growth and that they are given liberal range where there is abundance of green feed and also animal feed in the form of insects, worms, etc.

It is poor economy to keep more cockerels than will be needed for next year's breeding operations. If they are sold as soon as they are large broiler or fryer size a loss will be stopped and the pullets will do better, without them.

Cold, damp, poorly lighted and ventilated poultry quarters favor the spread of such diseases as roup. Such contagious diseases as these are difficult and sometimes impossible to control unless given attention in the early stages. Wherever preventive measures fail to operate sick birds from the flock as soon as there is evidence of disease and then obtain expert advice to effect a cure.

If the chickens cannot be confined on account of bad weather, provide a good straw litter to which their grain feed may be scattered. This will give them exercise and keep them interested and healthy. When chickens that have been accustomed to free range are closely confined they frequently checks their development for the time being unless they are made contented in their new quarters. Provide a good feed for them at first.

Indian Runner ducks seem to have gone out of fashion, which is a pity, as they are excellent layers, and stand at the head as table fowls. They are easily raised, do not make the disagreeable noises that other ducks do and eat less than any other breed of ducks. They thrive on coarse feed, and can be raised cheaply and safely, as a duck hatched usually means one raised to maturity.

When We Plant a Tree.

What do we plant when we plant the tree?
We plant the houses for you and me.
We plant the rafters, the shingles, the doors,
We plant the studding, the laths, the doors,
The beams and sliding; all parts that are new.

HENS AND EGG LAYING

A Melange About the Handling of Barnyard Poultry

How to Tell the Layers—Conditions Necessary for Production—High Egg-Yielding — Distribution of Eggs—More Poultry Points.

(Contributed by Ontario Department of Agriculture, Toronto.)

Can you tell which hens are laying without the use of trap nests? This is easy to determine if one will go to the trouble of handling each bird suspected of being a loafer. When a hen commences to lay, conditions in the organs concerned in reproduction are quite different from conditions observed during the period of idleness. When the ovary is dormant and no eggs are being produced the distance between the pelvic bones is small. The vent is dry, small, puckered, and is yellow fleshed chickens, has a band of yellow pigment around the inside. When laying commences the pelvic bones become sweet, or with low acidity, as that is what is wanted by most judges.

Keep the cream cool and churn at a temperature low enough to bring the butter in nice, firm granules in from twenty to twenty-five minutes.

Offers Kiss by Proxy.

The majority of the women candidates in the British elections showed themselves quite capable of paying back interrupters and would-be funny men in their own coin.

There is a story about the Duchess of Atholl. A certain rather too free and independent elector, recalling how another duchess, one of the "Gay Gordons," paid for a vote with a kiss, told her that his price was a similar salute.

"Certainly!" was the reply: "I'll give the kiss to your wife and she can pass it on."

"Lobster-back."

"The term 'lobster' used to be applied to the British soldier as an offensive epithet, and when a British warship came into the harbor of a garrison town there were frequent clashes between the sailors and the soldiers, caused by the sailors' too liberal use of 'lobster' or 'lobster-back,' suggested by the resemblance of the red coat to the boiled lobster. The sailors generally won out in these affrays, which became so serious that it was found necessary to keep the soldiers within bounds while the shore leave of the sailors continued."

Mr. and Mrs. Thos. Tierney, Mrs. I. Sherman and Mrs. T. Gibson are visiting friends at Central Butte, Sask.

Mr. Thos. Hallowes and son, of Cordelaine, Idaho, spent a few days last week visiting his sister, Mrs. McVicar, and niece, Mrs. W. A. Masters.

"God, even our own God shall bless us," Ps. 67-6; "Take therefore no thought for the morrow," Mat. 7-34; "Being then made free from sin, we became the servants of righteousness," Rom. 6-18; "O how great is Thy goodness, which Thou hast laid up for them that fear Thee," Ps. 31-19; "Ye are all the children of God, by faith in Christ Jesus," Gal. 3-26.

Leaning on Thee with childlike faith,
To Thee the future I confide,
Each step of life's untrodden path
Thy love shall guide.

A BIBLE LOVER.

Owing to a change in the business of Davy & Allison, all accounts must be paid by 10th August.

Will Come Later.

Simplicity, Sincerity, and Solidity

are the three characteristics of a granite memorial like this shown in the illustration. Simplicity of nature, sincerity of convictions, solidity of principles and character. Although such a monument may seem crude and unfinished, it is really a touching tribute of esteem.

We make and erect all kinds, Plain or elaborate, at the lowest possible cost.
